TO DEAL IN STOCKS

Rossland's Enterprising Men About to Open Up an Exchange.

JIM WARDNER IS UP THERE

He Has a Townsite Scheme Up His Sleeve—Operations in Slocan Mines—Captain Hall is Doing Quite Well.

Special Correspondence of the Standard.
Rossland, March 18.—There has been quite an excitement here during the week about the establishment of a stock exchange, and on Monday evening, after an all-day session, the brokers appointed a board of trustees who will open an exchange as soon as a charter can be obtained. This will take but a few days to accomplish. There was no question among the brokers as to the desirability of such an exchange.

Spokane started one more than a month ago, and the Rosslanders stood by waiting to see it collapse. But, on the contrary, although started under the most disadvantageous circumstances, it has succeeded, and to such an extent that the Rosslanders feel bound to start one of their own. The Spokane exchange is supposed to be a Washington institution, but there are no Washington mines at present, only claims that may be valuable properties. In this it is ahead of the times. But it has made up for it in its dealings with British Columbia properties that are mines. It has created a market for these stocks and the Rossland brokers began to ask themselves, "Why should we pay commissions to the men of the Spokane exchange?" So Rossland has determined to have an exchange.

Jim Wardner arrived here on Monday with his big rosy face bigger and rosier than ever and, of course, with a town lot boom ready to spring on the first person, and every other person, that he can buttonhole. James P. Wardner has done a great deal of booming in a few years, and may be said to be the most successful man in his line of business. He boomed up Fairhaven, on Bellingham bay, Puget sound. He also took a leading part in booming up Kaslo, which to-day has recovered from its boom and is growing rapidly and solidly prosperous on its merits—that is, on its advantageous situation and the development of the mines in its vicinity.

Ten minutes after Mr. Wardner arrived in town on Monday it was known that he had a brand new boom. He has as traveling companion Capt. F. P. Armstrong, who is the pioneer steamboat man of the Kootenay and Columbia rivers between Golden, B. C., and Jennings, Mont. He and Mr. Wardner have just completed the organization of the International Transportation company, which is to operate a line of steamers between Fort Steele and Jennings. Captain Armstrong will also manage the Upper Columbia Navigation company, which will have a line of steamers between Fort Steele and Golden.

The land scheme comes in on the west bank of the Kootenay, where the Crow's Nest Pass railroad is certain, from Mr. Wardner's inside information, to cross the river. Associated in this scheme is the Earl of Norbury, which name will give a sound to the prospect, but is not nearly as well known in Montana or this country as that of Wardner. Perhaps that is the reason why the new town at this point is to be called Wardner instead of Norbury.

This reminds one of the founding and naming of the town of Burke, Idaho. John M. Burke, who has been at Kaslo for the past two weeks, himself tells the story. "I went there to settle, took a piece of land, built myself a hut upon it and started a townsite calling it Burke. The enterprise progressed all right, but after a time they set in and proved that I had no title to the land. So I told them that I could keep the name and be damned."

The Kaslo mines, by the way, are making a very large and promising showing just now. For the week ended March 12 they shipped nearly 800 tons of ore, the largest amount the Kaslo & Spokane railroad has ever carried in one week. This ton will undoubtedly be largely increased, and the total shipments for the month of March will undoubtedly attract great attention.

On the 15th the Good Enough paid a dividend of $24,000. This mine is in the hands of a few individuals, who have developed it themselves.

Constantine L. Webb is a name that will strike many Montana mining men as familiar, although among mining circles it has not been heard of for years. He was one of the leading ore brokers of Denver in the boom days of Colorado, and a high firm of prominence that its weekly circular was quoted as authoritative on the New York and London markets. Webb had also a reputation as an expert, making reports on mining properties for which he commanded high fees. In the dull days he migrated to Seattle, Wash., and started a large wholesale grocery. But times got to be bad there, and are to-day. Last fall Mr. Webb went to Slocan and picked up the Montezuma, on the south fork of Kaslo creek. On his return to Seattle he raised the capital there and immediately began extensive operations. He and E. C. Hughes, a leading lawyer of Seattle, who is associated with him, came up this week to visit the Montezuma. That they were pleased with the showing is demonstrated by the fact that they have ordered a 100-ton concentrator plant and a Bleichert tramway connecting it with the mine; an expenditure right on the jump of about $45,000. Webb is both able and daring, and as he is enthusiastic on the subject of the Slocan country, he will probably shortly become one of the leading figures in its mining circles.

Nothing can well exceed the satisfaction which beams from the rugged countenance of Capt. William Hall of the Le Roi these days. He is preparing for another test of the low-grade ores which he feels certain will show even better results than those of last week.

Samson W. Hall, who was with him on the old High Ore No. 2 for five years, joined him on the Le Roi a couple of months ago and is doing good work. He and Nicholas Tregear, whom Captain Hall brought with him last September, are his leading foremen. Tregear sent for his family recently and has them comfortably located in the Le Roi property, which is rapidly assuming the appearance of a prosperous village. Captain Hall was exceedingly cordial in his welcome to the Standard correspondent, because, as he put it, the Standard is the only paper he can swear by. He invited the correspondent to dinner, showed him all over the great workings of the mines (of which there will be more to be said anon) and particularly desired to be remembered to his Anaconda friends.

GOT TOO GAY.

A Montana Student Expelled From Garrett Biblical Institute.

From the Chicago Inter Ocean.
Nettled by recent escapades of two students at Garrett Biblical Institute, Evanston, the faculty of that school has determined upon greater care in the admission of students than has heretofore been exercised. Several times during the last few years the authorities of the big Methodist training school for preachers have been shocked to find among its students a wolf in sheep's clothing. The latest honors in this direction seem to have fallen upon a student from Michigan and another from Montana, both of whom have been recently expelled by President Charles J. Little, without benefit of clergy.

Both men seemed to be poor, and while rooming at Heck hall each paid his school expenses by running a boarding house. One was married, but didn't want to be; the other was not married and wanted to be. Therein lay the secrets of their downfall.

They entered school last fall as candidates for the ministry. The Wolverine presented credentials which purported to represent him as a probationer in the Detroit, Mich., conference, and was admitted without further question to the privileges of the school. The man from Montana also carried papers of recommendation, but they were less pretentious than his fellow's, being only a note signed by his supposed pastor, indicating that the bearer was a candidate for the ministry. The former was genial and became quite popular with his boarders, among whom he posed as an unmarried man. But one luckless day, while dinner was being served, his wife appeared upon the scene, and the fond illusion of the club boys, that their landlord was a fellow bachelor, was rudely dispelled. He smoothed the matter over by telling the boys he had only been fooling them, and they promised to say nothing about it. His wife stayed at the club a week, when her husband took her back to Michigan. He returned to school, but through several transactions with his fellow students his ways were found to be very shady. He was quietly reported to President Little, who, without any ceremony, told him to leave at once. The story was kept under cover until yesterday, when it inadvertently leaked out.

During all these days the would-be divine from the western mountains was in clover. His club house was largely patronized, and his fame as a "good fellow well met" spread throughout the town. It was not long, however, till he became a man of his head and shoulders above the crowd. His actions in public so overstepped bounds of propriety that he was dismissed from school Saturday. He left town yesterday, saying that he was going to get married at once. It is said that before taking his departure he forgot to settle accounts with several students and a down-town merchant.
